

Democracy in Action

Healthy neighborhoods and jobs that pay the bills – Fresno can have both.

It starts with treating community members as part of the solution. Healthy neighborhoods are the foundation of any thriving city. Fresno can have a strong economy and build healthy neighborhoods, while prioritizing the health of children and families.

Listen to the people.

They know what their neighborhoods need. Together, we have ensured that south Fresno neighborhoods get the investment they deserve:

- Community leaders pushed for the relocation of a longtime toxic polluter, away from neighborhoods;
- South Central Neighbors United blocked a massive industrial project from being built in their neighborhood and near a school;
- Youth have led the design and development of a new world-class BMX Park to be built at Mary Ella Brown Community Center.

Democracy flourishes in the light: let the sun shine on Fresno City Hall. Council members and the mayor need to reach out to people, respect their vision, and value community members.

Healthy neighborhoods and jobs that pay the bills – Fresno can have both, with the people's help.

Get involved! March 10-16 is Sunshine Week, which highlights how open government, transparency and public access improve lives and make communities stronger.
