

What's Next? Fresno's Political Landscape as Seen by Youth Activists

The next meeting of the Central Valley Progressive PAC will feature Ashley Rojas, executive director of Fresno Barrios Unidos, who will share her vision for a more just and equitable Fresno, followed by a discussion of our strategic plan to win political power in this community.

What is Barrios Unidos? They write: "Fresno Barrios Unidos provides unconditional support, love and guidance for youth, young adults and their families in Fresno. Our community, like California, is changing fast, and we believe our youth must be at the forefront of creating the world of their dreams. We meet people where they are and follow their lead to help them be healthy, hopeful and engaged in creating communities that foster our individual and collective well-being."

You are invited to this CVPPAC meeting, which will be held via Zoom on Saturday, March 13, at 3:30 p.m. You can get a link to the event on the CVPPAC website (www.cvppac.org) five days before the event. For more information, contact Simone Cranston-Rhodes at 559-978-4504 or simone.rhodes@seiu521.org.

Do you want. . .

Join us as we continue our strategic plan to elect progressives to local office, build a labor/ community alliance, demand clean air, clean water, police accountability and for all workers to earn a living wage. With your support we will win political power.
